

This transcript was exported on Mar 16, 2021 - view latest version here.

When I was in high school, I started working at a local law firm in my hometown as a file clerk. From there, I worked through the years as a receptionist legal secretary, and then eventually just worked my way up to being a paralegal. I would say my first real foray into elder law was with an attorney in Jacksonville. I think it's a chance to help people. I think it's a chance also to not just help the clients, but their families. I think the biggest compliment that I ever received from a client was that I was her guardian angel. And that was during the administration of her husband's trust, and I think she really needed someone to guide her through the process.